CDC Software Intends to Sell its Holdings in Chordiant Software, Inc.

SHANGHAI, ATLANTA Jan. 11, 2010 CDC Software Corporation (NASDAQ: CDCS), a global provider of enterprise software applications and services, today announced that, as it disclosed on its conference call last Friday, it intends to sell its holdings in Chordiant, which totaled 392,762 shares of Chordiant, or approximately 1.3 percent of Chordiant's 30.4 million shares outstanding, as of January 5, 2010. As a Chordiant shareholder, CDC Software does not believe that Chordiant has acted in the best interests of its shareholders in evaluating its offer.

On January 11, 2010, Chordiant issued a press release responding to CDC Software's proposal. In the press release, Chordiant rejected the offer stating that the proposal undervalues Chordiant and is not in the best interests of Chordiant's shareholders. The Chordiant release also states that there was no prior acquisition-related dialogue between Chordiant and CDC Software.

Peter Yip, CEO of CDC Software stated, "We are very disappointed by Chordiant's apparent summary response to, and dismissal of, our offer, which was delivered to us this early morning, without any prior substantive contact from either Chordiant management or Morgan Stanley, its retained investment advisor on the merits of our proposal. We were disappointed with this morning's announcement by Chordiant, especially since Chordiant advised us on January 6, 2010 by email that our proposal would be discussed at a regularly-scheduled board meeting later in the month.

Furthermore, in contrast to Chordiant's statement in its press release, we have attempted to meet with, and engage in, discussions with Chordiant on several occasions, beginning last year and continuing into 2010. Each time, our attempts were dismissed outright.

Yip continued, "We are particularly concerned with Chordiant's assertions, especially since we had indicated our offer of shared-responsibility in the combined company for the executive management team. Multiple industry and Wall Street analysts as well as several mutual Tier 1 customers, have expressed their strong belief that the merger would be beneficial to both companies and their respective shareholders. We believe that in addition to our cash offer, we estimate that we would be required to expend a very significant amount, which we currently estimate would be approximately $0.60 to $0.75 per share, post-closing, in order to restructure Chordiant and realize our expected operating cost savings. This would include costs for severance and golden parachute payments, as well as other integration-related expenditures.

Based on publicly-available information including Chordiant's proxy statement filed with the SEC on December 18, 2009, while holding less than 5% of Chordiant's outstanding shares, the officers and directors of Chordiant have repeatedly frustrated previous offers for Chordiant. We believe these actions are not in the best interests of Chordiant shareholders. We believe that the current management has been utilizing Section 203 of the Delaware General Corporation Law to entrench themselves in the company and stifle any potential acquisitions.
