A Combined AT&T-DirecTV Will Expand Broadband Services to Millions of Rural Americans

Overview:

- The combined company will bring new and better high-speed broadband options to millions more Americans, the majority of them in rural areas.
- Customers in many of these locations will, for the first time, receive the type of Internet service that people in other areas take for granted.
 - AT&T's high-speed fixed broadband networks will cover 70 million customer locations.
- This expansion will make over-the-top services such as Netflix, Amazon, Google, and Hulu available to millions of people who currently lack sufficient connectivity to enjoy these services.

The Transaction Will Allow AT&T to Deploy Its Fixed WLL Broadband Service in Rural Areas in 48 States:

- Today, many Americans in rural areas lack access to high-speed broadband service or have access to only one provider, typically using older cable or DSL technology. Moreover, many of these rural customers lack access to integrated bundles of broadband, video, and voice services and are thus forced to acquire these services separately, often at significant expense and inconvenience.
- The transaction will make it possible for AT&T to expand its deployment of an LTE-based fixed wireless local loop (WLL) broadband product.
- With the synergies from the transaction, AT&T will offer fixed WLL to an estimated 13 million largely underserved, rural customer locations.
 - o Those locations will be spread across 48 states both in and out of AT&T's wireline region.
- o Almost 20 percent of the 13 million customer locations where AT&T's fixed WLL service will become available have no access to terrestrial broadband services today.
- o An additional 27 percent of the 13 million customer locations have only one terrestrial option today, and in most instances that single option is DSL or a relatively slow cable modem service.
- The fixed WLL service will be offered and priced as a home broadband service, not a mobile wireless service. It will be designed to offer a robust broadband experience, using advanced technologies, including professionally installed customer premises equipment that enhance spectral efficiency and signal quality.
- Fixed WLL is designed to perform as well as wireline broadband services advertised today at 15-20 Mbps and will have a usage allowance that will readily satisfy most customers' needs.
- In the areas where AT&T will deploy the fixed WLL solution, it will be comparable, and typically superior, to the wireline services available in both speed and reliability.
- The ability to provide a true bundle of integrated satellite video, home broadband, and home VoIP services will make for a more competitive and compelling offer in these underserved areas.
- AT&T has committed to complete the investment within four years of the transaction's closing and to offer fixed WLL broadband service to approximately 13 million largely rural customer locations that otherwise would not have been reached by its wireline broadband services.
